THE COVER

The sad-eyed, absurdly solemn sea creature shown is one of a reduced world population of walruses, valued principally for their ivory tusks and tough hides. A new U. S. law has halted their commercial or sports killing and the importation of walrus products, though Alaskan natives may still take them for food. For more on legal protection for the walrus, polar bear and other marine mammals, see Editorial Report, pp. 36-38.

Photograph was taken by Leonard Lee Rue, III, of Blairstown, N. J. with a Hasselblad 500C camera, equipped with a 120 mm. lens. Exposure was 1/125 sec. at f/9 on Ektachrome X 120 film.
