Trusting Even Without Answers
by Jill Briscoe

At times most of us ask God questions like, "Are You there? Do You care?" Instead, perhaps we should ask ourselves if we will continue trusting him when the answers are obscure or unexpected.

God's Plan for

by Billy Graham

We know that broken homes are one of the great social problems today. Broken homes could lead to the destruction of our civilization.

The anguish and suffering that divorce brings to children caught in a situation that is not of their own making shows that we have certainly not yet reached the day when a child no longer needs both parents.

Besides divorce, there are a host of legal separations and annulments. There are thousands of homes where husband and wife continue living together, but the marriage is an endurance contest—arguing, fighting, calling each other names. Statistics don't tell of the thousands of boys and girls living in foster homes and orphanages and correctional institutions, or those living difficult lives because of broken homes.

Turn to the book of Genesis and read about the first marriage that took place. The crowning act of God's creative work is the creation of man and woman in his own image. Man finds his highest fulfillment and fellowship with God, but his nature also demands communication with his fellow man. The highest expression of human communication is the husband-wife relationship.
