THE COVER

Do the three young gentlemen feel wonderful in their chic garments and rejoice at their opportunity to absorb social graces and not grow up into stumblebums? The answer is no. Well, then, are the four young non-gentlemen jealous, subconsciously yearning to don glad rags and trip some light fantastic with the comely sex? At any layer of consciousness, NO. All right, let's turn to something more agreeable, such as a fight. If the young gents blow their stacks and, though outnumbered, try to pulverize the foe, who will triumph? Many a valiant heart goes lub-dub beneath an impeccable jacket, and this might be a whingding of a conflict. Thornton Utz has a zany idea—he predicts a draw, because the same boys posed for both the baddies and the goodies.
