18 Stimulus/Response

Jokers Wild in the Lab

by Zick Rubin

Can an experimenter, in the name of science, justify making a subject believe that he is homosexual, or that he has destroyed valuable equipment, or that he has electrocuted another person? Insights into the fun-and-games crowd.

CHILDREN:

27 Prophets & Losses: An Introduction

by T George Harris

29 A Child's Garden of Law & Order

by June L. Tapp

Fear of chaos, not fear of punishment, persuades children to conform to socially prescribed rules of behavior and accept them as their own values. A study of children in Greece, Denmark, India, Italy, Japan and the U.S. (white and black).

32 Learning the Language

by Ursula Bellugi

"The teacher helded the rabbit and we petted it," the little girl said. The author explains why, and also tells about Adam and Eve and Sarah, wugs, teets, auxiliary verbs, tense, tag questions and such.

36 Day Care Can Be Dangerous

by Jerome Kagan and Phillip Whitten

The child can come to trust or hate others in a neighbor's apartment, a commune, or a recently built nursery school, say the authors. A close look at some of the perils involved in meeting one of today's most urgent demands.

42 Spare the Rod, Use Behavior Mod

by Roger W. McIntire

In the New Way it is not important to be bigger than the offspring who is causing the trouble. It helps, however, to be smarter—or at least to have good advice.

45 Never Mind Your Horoscope, Birth Order Rules All

by Walter Toman

A marriage made in heaven is unlikely to have a youngest brother of brothers wed to a youngest sister of sisters. Some combinations are ideal; others don't have a chance; all are described by a student of sibling position.

50 Bad Education—A Conversation with Jerome Bruner

by Elizabeth Hall

Perhaps, says Bruner, we should abolish all schools of education. Education ought to be the responsibility of the entire university. He also nominates some teachers to be tried as educational criminals.

52 Jerome Bruner—A Sketch

by Elizabeth Hall

58 Pornography

by Harold S. Kant and Michael J. Goldstein

A study of the influence of pornography on rapists, child-molesters, men who buy pornography, and a sample of ordinary men—what it prompts them to do and what part it played in their adolescent years. The results are startling.
