The Sibling Bond: A Lifelong Love/Hate Dialectic

By Virginia Adams

Once upon a time, sibling studies were always about children. No more. Psychologists are now investigating adult sibling relationships and finding them remarkably various. For a good many brothers and sisters, closeness and competitiveness remain for years in uneasy equilibrium.

Is It Right?

An Inquiry into Everyday Ethics

By James Hassett and the editors Would you buy a stolen TV set? Lie for a friend who's having a secret affair? Your responses to the latest PT survey should tell us-and yousomething about what people do in ethically intricate situations.

60

Mood and Memory

By Gordon H. Bower When we're in a good mood, we're better at remembering happy words and pleasant experiences. Likewise for a sad mood. An experimental psychologist concludes: "We have now found powerful influences of emotional states upon selective perception, learning, retrieval, judgments, and imagination."

71

Flashbulb Memory

By Beryl Lieff Benderly It's as if the brain issued the command,"Now print!" Certain moments in life seem to be imprinted in stunning detail on the nervous system. Psychologists are trying to explain why.

Can Companies Kill?

By Berkeley Rice

Some employees work under intense pressure without suffering any obvious ill effects; others develop emotional difficulties that may lead to serious illness or even suicide. The difference between the two groups may be crucial in deciding an issue now before the courts: how to assess a corporation's responsibility for the mental health of its workers.

Update / How Guns Control Us

By Leonard Berkowitz

The finger pulls the trigger, but the trigger may also be pulling the finger. That the mere presence of a gun can stimulate aggression is a finding reinforced by recent studies.

Field Report / The Logic of Fire Escape

By John P. Keating and Elizabeth F. Loftus Study of behavior in fires suggests that panic causes fewer deaths than do mistakes in judgment. Also, men and women seem to react differently.

Newsline

Faulty mental maps; power and penis envy; and other items.

Aftermath / Brouhaha over Biopsych

Reader reactions, mostly irate, to an article in our February issue.

94

Books / Family Dance Marathons

By Paul Chance

Two new books on family therapy see the patient's symptoms as part of a larger "dance."

The Brain / Matching Bits with the Computer

By Evan Harris Walker A fast computer can process 1 trillion bits a second. But the brain's capacity is 10 times that.
