MARCH 1975 | VOL. 8 NO. 10

THE MAGAZINE OF HUMAN EXPERIENCE

Lloyd S. Etheredge	37	Personality and Foreign Policy: Bullies in the State Department Studies of professional diplomats indicate that self-confident men with an itch to be influential are likely to drop a bomb when crisis threatens. A nation that wants to stay out of war should look for self-confident men who harbor no private fantasies of power.
T George Harris	39	A Policy-Maker's View: Experience Vs. Character George Ball, former Under-secretary of State, argues that diplomats impose their own pasts on each new situation.
Sol Chaneles	43	A Job Program for Exconvicts That Works Five years after their release, nearly 90 percent of all convicts are back in the slammer. Here's a low-cost program for producing worthwhile jobs that keeps excons free and working.
Hadley V. Baxendale	49	A Person Who Menstruates Is Unfit to be a Mother
C. R. Snyder and Randeae Jae Shenkel	52	The P. T. Barnum Effect The human illusion that each of us is unique may explain the thriving astrology, graphology, and psychological testing industries. Want to buy a slightly used horoscope?
David T. Lykken	56	The Right Way to Use a Lie Detector Take lie detectors away from business and out of the courtroom, urges a psychologist. Hand them instead to the police, for the polygraph has no equal in establishing a suspect's guilty knowledge of a crime.
Margie Casady	59	Formula for Fibbing The mathematics of the lie detector.
Laura Schreiber and Robert L. Koegel	61	Autism: a Defeatable Horror Here is hope for despairing parents of autistic children; a treatment that allows mothers and fathers to act as therapists could keep afflicted children out of institutions, and help normal kids learn.
Laura Schreiber and Robert L. Koegel	67	A Christmas Tree for Kristin , the civilization of an autistic toddler.
Joyce Dudney Fleming and David Maxey	68	Pursuit of Intellectual Orgasm , a conversation with Frank Beach, animal behaviorist. His careful research asks why male dogs lift their legs, why bitches reject some males, whether impotence follows castration, and why an excess of male hormones makes rats effeminate. The answers have human implications.
Joyce Dudney Fleming	70	"Do It Right and Do It Alone," a sketch of Frank Beach.
T George Harris	4	Personal: Us Fat Cats
Joyce Carol Oates	18	Books: Science, Quirks and Creativity A novelist dissolves Sir George Pickering's attempt to equate sickness with creative genius in Creative Malady .
Neil Postman	22	Books: Lifeline for Teachers The No-Lose Method put forth in T.E.T. Teacher Effectiveness Training should help in any classroom.
Barbara Wersba	24	Books: The Slynacks Will Get You A suspense novel for teenagers falls victim to the fashionable demand for Hard Truth.
Joseph D. Offir	27	Books: When Reach Exceeds Grasp An abortive attempt by mathematicians to simulate the psychiatric interview.
Patrice Horn	15	News Line: Sex and the American executive; fighting delinquency with family therapy; who gets robbed and where; and other items.
Mark Freedman	28	Stimulus/Response: Homosexuals May Be Healthier Than Straights Gays are not sick; in fact, they may function better than their heterosexual neighbors. To be a liberated gay, a gay psychologist argues, may also mean being honest, free from society's restrictions and open to a varied sex life.
