This expert's shooting savvy is part of every Remington

The man above is Dan Carroll, one of the most knowledgeable riflemen in the country. He also works for Remington. Dan is so highly regarded that literally dozens of good shooters come to talk things over with him at every match. So when Dan suggests a change or improvement that might make some Remington gun or cartridge a bit better, we pay close attention to what he says. And his advice usually results in a better product for the shooter.

Remington has many "Dan Carrolls." Some specialize in varmint shooting, others in trap and skeet. Some are expert hunters. All of them have a strong influence on Remington design.

Next time you squeeze one off at a whitetail or the X-ring of a target, remember these expert shooters at Remington. Their personal field experience has helped make Remington guns and ammunition the most consistent performers you can buy. Perhaps that's why Remington products score so well when the competition is toughest. The results of the 1962 Camp Perry National Matches (right) are a good example.
