Mind as Healer, Mind as Slayer
 by Kenneth R. Pelletier
 The stress of modern living calls for bringing the healing arts together. Mind, body, and soul must be treated as a unit.

42
The New Science of Genetic Self-Interest
 Sociobiologist Irven DeVore talks with Scot Morris about our selfish genes. It's not survival of the fittest, but reproduction of the individual's genes that motivates man and beast.

Man in the Middle
 A sketch of Irven DeVore

53
The Busy, Purposeful World of a Baby
 by Michael Lewis
 A baby knows who he is before his language can tell us. He's not only aware; he's sometimes in control.

61
Orchestra Conductors Would Make Good Porpoise Trainers
 by Karen Pryor
 Every little movement has a meaning all its own. With porpoise trainers it's called operant conditioning; in orchestra conductors, it's genius.

Who Wouldn't Help a Lost Child? You, Maybe.
 by Harold Takooshian, Sandra Haber, and David J. Lucido Helping a lost tyke is not as universal a reaction as you would expect, especially in the city.

70
Sweaty Palms in the Control Tower
 by David Martindale
 Air controllers lead lives of constant stress. Juggling 1,900 flights a day takes its toll in ulcers, nightmares, and shattered nerves.

76
Dance Therapy
 by Elaine Feder and Bernard Feder
 The language of movement often communicates a person's feelings better than cautious, self-censored speech.

109
Workers Can Set Their Own Wages—Responsibly
 by Edward E. Lawler
 The heretical idea that employees can decide their own wages and benefits is gaining ground.
