MARCH 1974 | VOL. 7, NO. 10

THE MAGAZINE ABOUT PSYCHOLOGY, SOCIETY AND HUMAN BEHAVIOR

Patrice Horn	14	News Line The safety valve of Eskimo humor; changing American values; youthful suicides; and other items.
B. M. Braginsky and D. D. Braginsky	18	Stimulus/Response: The Mentally Retarded: Society's Hansels and Gretels Many institutionalized retardates are adept, rational, resourceful and intelligent human beings, cast off by a society that uses faulty IQ tests and labels like mental retardation to clear human debris from the community.
T George Harris	33	The Benefits of Depravity , an editorial.
Paul B. Baltes and K. Warner Schaie	35	Aging and IQ: The Myth of the Twilight Years Research indicates that intelligence does not decline with age. IQ tests, constructed to predict school performance, are as biased against the old as they are against members of other races and cultures.
Carole Offir	40	Old People's Revolt—"At 65, Work Becomes a Four-Letter Word" Gray Panthers and the American Association of Retired Persons are fighting this society's treatment of the old.
Farnum Gray, Paul S. Graubard and Harry Rosenberg	42	Little Brother Is Changing You Amid the nervous questioning over who will control the controllers, a California school system showed a group of junior-high-school students the principles of behavior modification. Parents, teachers and peers responded to their conditioning, supporting Skinner's claim that control is a two-way street.
Jay Livingston	51	Compulsive Gamblers, a Culture of Losers Members of Gamblers Anonymous tend to show similarities in character: a desire for unsolicited admiration; an intensely competitive outlook; and a highly charged view of money. They lose, too.
Paul Chance	57	Reversing the Bigotry of Language: How PT Readers Fared When researchers showed that our language's bias against the color black stains our racial attitudes, we asked readers to search their vocabularies for terms that reverse this inherent bigotry.
Arnold A. Lazarus	59	Multimodal Therapy: Basic Id A therapy that relies on one approach is unlikely to bring long-term benefits. BASIC ID sidesteps the single technique trap and marches ahead, armed with every approach devised by the trade.
Elizabeth Hall	65	Ethology's Warning , a conversation with Nobel Prize winner Niko Tinbergen. The rise in childhood autism may be an early warning signal that society now requires too much of man. Tinbergen speaks of his work with autistic children, of the war between psychology and ethology, and of aggression.
Elizabeth Hall	68	The Gnawing Guilt of a Bird Watcher , a sketch of Niko Tinbergen.
David Tresemer	82	Fear of Success; Popular, but Unproven The much heralded fear of success that was supposed to impede woman's achievement may be the fear of an inappropriate sex role. But this much is clear: laymen—and women—assumed too much from the early data.
