Dear Reader:

It should not surprise you to learn that among the subscribers to this magazine are K.G.B. authorities in Moscow. Their "libraries" and "institutes" renew on time, pay in dollars, and never write letters to the editor. We can only imagine what they think of American Opinion, and what they would delight in doing to us if ever given the chance.

The point is that it is normally almost impossible to learn firsthand of Communist reaction to our repeated exposures of their activities, plots, and machinations. Conspirators act in secrecy; and Communism is, above all else, a conspiracy.

Now comes Douglass Durham, until very recently Chief of Security for the American Indian Movement, which the Communists have been using to foment violence and hatred throughout our country. Durham, as it happens, was from the beginning an undercover operative for the F.B.I. And he has now surfaced to report, among other things, that the single most important blow ever struck against A.I.M. was Dr. Susan Huck's exposé of its operations at Wounded Knee which appeared in American Opinion for May 1973. That article, called "Renegades," was reprinted and distributed by the scores of thousands.

Dr. Huck's factual report became a factor in the St. Paul trial of the Wounded Knee leaders and was called "highly prejudicial to the defense" by the judge — whose own wife, Durham now reports, was a member of A.I.M. When Aimster boss Russell Means read it, says Durham, he "went out and got howling drunk." And with reason. For, from the time of the publication of "Renegades," wherever the organizers of A.I.M. went, they first had to ask: "Have you seen 'Renegades'?" Where the answer was affirmative, fund-raising was sparse and recruiting almost impossible.

In the article which begins on the next page, Alan Stang tells the full story of what Douglass Durham saw and heard inside the American Indian Movement. It may be only a coincidence that, as we go to press with what you are about to read, A.I.M. leader Dennis Banks is a fugitive from justice and (according to plan) doing his best to reach the Red Chinese Embassy in Canada. But the organization he has left behind is once more operating as viciously as ever. Which is why reprints of Mr. Stang's "Red Indians" will be available immediately.

The editors of American Opinion are very pleased indeed to congratulate our readers for helping to make things happen. If there is a more powerful weapon than the truth, simply told, we have yet to learn of it. And we are convinced that what you do with this issue of American Opinion will give the officers of the K.G.B., reading this in Moscow, more than enough reason to see just how formidable the truth can be.

Sincerely,

Scott Stanley Jr.

OVER the years it has become a truism that American Indians have been mistreated. Indeed, it is fair to say that in comparison the experience of American Negroes, at least since the Great Emancipation, has been idyllic. Indians have been victimized by every other con man who has come down the pike. But the latest such con operation is unique. In the past the villains have usually been white men, trading firewater for land, or manipulating the Indians for other purposes in distant Washington and New York. Today, the villains are still white men, but they are collaborating with various Red men of assorted colors who are traitors to their tribes — as part of a carefully orchestrated scheme to betray them, and all Americans, into Communist slavery. The name of the game is A.I.M. — the so-called American Indian Movement — and now comes a man who can tell us much about it.

Douglass F. Durham is a former Marine who later served for three years as a Des Moines policeman. He moved up from street patrol to the vice squad, then left the department and went into the food business, where he wound up with a string of three restaurants. One of them was located in a nasty neighborhood, and was frequented by Black Panthers and other crooks, such as safecrackers — and the Federal Bureau of Investigation approached Mr. Durham with the request that he keep the Bureau informed. He did so; in fact, on the very next day, by keeping his ears open, he delivered a couple of robbers, along with information about a robbery scheduled to take place soon. Later, Douglass Durham worked for the Des Moines police chief as a paid intelligence agent; for the federal immigration and customs authorities; and, for the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs.
