GTO JUDGE: Pontiac's sporty, fire-breathing GTO was well established as a premier pony car by 1969, when the colorfully trimmed and Ram Air-engine-powered Judge was introduced. This "hugger orange" example is fitted with the standard Ram Air 400-cid V-8 rated at 366 hp, but there was also an optional Ram Air IV engine, a 400-cid V-8 capable of dispensing a heart-throbbing 370 hp. . . . . 6

HUDSON: The 1947 Hudson lineup was the last before the company's major post-war restyling, and it was also the last for a Hudson truck. From the cab forward, the Hudson Super Six Pickup of 1947 closely resembled, almost duplicated, the passenger car of the same year. The truck, one of the most stylish pickups ever made, wasn't very popular at the time. Today, however, it's an appealing design to both truck and non-truck enthusiasts. . . . . 22

JORDAN: Ned Jordan left his job as advertising manager at the Thomas B. Jeffery Co. and founded his own firm, the Jordan Motor Car Co., in 1916. While his cars were attractive, nicely detailed "assembled" machines, it was his creative advertising and promotion that earned the Jordan car a distinguished spot in automotive history. Ned Jordan is seen here at the wheel of a 1917 Jordan Six Roadster. . . . . 26

PLYMOUTH WOODIE: Certainly different in appearance, the 1938 Plymouth Westchester Suburban, a true woodie wagon, was not especially popular with either dealers or the public. The rather odd-looking grille, among other things, was abruptly changed the following year to something a bit more acceptable to conservative Plymouth buyers. This rare '38 is painted a gleaming black. . . 30

WALTER P. CHRYSLER: One of the industry's greatest pioneers . . . 10
