The fantastic Krebiozen story . . . by Robert P. Goldman 15

In 1951 a world-renowned medical scientist announced a new treatment for cancer. Now, after 13 years of professional quarreling over its usefulness—during which time it was used in patient care by more than 3,000 physicians—Krebiozen has been declared ineffective in the treatment of cancer by the Food and Drug Administration. Contributing science writer Robert P. Goldman, who has studied and written about the "miracle" drug since its public debut, traces the history of this bitter controversy and explains why it is still unresolved.

The authors. Although she gave up cigarette smoking months ago, actress Inger Stevens did succumb to several puffs from free-lance writer Richard Warren Lewis's pet meerscham pipe during the course of their interviews. . . . Fredric C. Appel, who reports on the porpoise's amazing sensibilities, is an associate editor. . . . Free-lancer Myron Cope explores the Little World of Don (Frank F.) Reyes, minister to migrant workers. . . . Russian cosmonette Valentina Tereshkova reveals for the first time the joys of her orbital journey last summer. . . . The recording industry's story of the year is told by Alfred G. Aronowitz, a contributing writer who frequently covers the musical scene. . . . Tom Coffey, a Nebraska trucker turned city manager, tells of his prolonged battle with Teamsters-union boss James Hoffa. . . . Milton Lewis, veteran crime reporter for the New York Herald Tribune, and his wife Mildred unfold the strange legal drama of judge's son Gareth Martinis.

The cover picture of Suzie the porpoise, shown retrieving a bouquet of roses in the Bahamas, was taken by underwater photographer Elgin Ciampi.
