THE COVER

The children need another room, so artist George Hughes has designated Mr. Fisher to be the displaced person. Mr. F., a lover of white-water streams and green-aisled forests, is devoted to his fishy den; but he is more devoted to the patter of little feet and the cacophony of little voices, and if just now he feels like snatching a gun from his arsenal and shooting those rabbits, such impulses will fade away. Tomorrow papa will be spared the pain of thinking about the interior redecorator clawing off his beloved wallpaper; at the office he will be mercifully worrying about something else. As for Mrs. F., she has no affection for mounted fishing trophies, but she does have affection for her husband; so over the living-room mantel she'll tenderly hang that deceased fish.
