14 Stimulus/Response: Sex and Violence—
We Can't Have It Both Ways by Leonard Berkowitz

Competent and conscientious research surveyed or commissioned by the Violence Commission and the Pornography Commission yielded similar findings: temporary stimulation. Yet the Commissions' conclusions were contradictory and—to the applause of liberal intellectuals—called for different policies. Values were at work.

30 Tie Line by Kenneth Goodall

A California town trains local persons, including high-school students, as mental-health workers; psychologists help Americans assimilate foreign cultures quickly; on-the-job sex discrimination is bad but few women realize it, a Michigan study shows; behavior mod reforms litterbugs; and other items.

AGE:

45 Grow Old Along With Me!
The Best Is Yet to Be by Bernice L. Neugarten

There is no single life-style for the aged, according to a psychologist who has studied more than 2,000 subjects. Persons over 65 differ more than the young do.

49 The Life Review by Robert N. Butler

It comes with age to every man—sometimes in peace, sometimes in excruciating, bitter pain, and a psychiatrist-gerontologist's interviews document the process.

52 Getting There Ahead of Time by Robert Kastenbaum

Force a young person to function under the conditions that the aged encounter and he will act as if he were old. Artificial situations can help one prepare for aging.

59 Dostoevsky as a Social Scientist by Pavel Simonov

The scientific study of human behavior has explained much about man's material and spiritual needs. But the Russian novelist got there first, and laboratory work validates many of his insights, says a Soviet psychophysicologist.

62 Sherlock Holmes as a Social Scientist by Marcello Truzzi & Scot Morris

A sociologist and a clinical psychologist point out that the Sherlock Holmes adventures are a primer in applying the scientific method to human problems.

64 The Cardboard Box by A. Conan Doyle

In an excerpt from one of the tales, Dr. Watson describes Sherlock Holmes at work.

66 Child's Play—Very Serious Business by Brian Sutton-Smith

The young child in play divides his time between genuine play and exploration. But, a psychologist points out, enjoyment of life is both the primary motive of the player and the major survival value of the game.

70 Babies: They're a Lot Smarter Than They Look by Lewis P. Lipsitt

For years, doctors gave mothers the impression that newborn babies were little more than vegetables. Research shows that on the first day of his life the tiny infant learns from experience.

74 From Dolphins to LSD—A Conversation with John Lilly by Sam Keen

What moves a man from neurophysiology and biophysics to the exploration of altered states of consciousness? The scientist who tried to talk to dolphins explains the pilgrimage that brought him to the state of satori.
