THE MAGAZINE OF THE HUMAN EXPERIENCE

David Greene
and Mark R. Lepper
Margie Casady

49 Intrinsic Motivation: How to Turn Play Into Work Gold stars and candy bars aren't always best. Rewarding a child for something he likes to do may turn delight to drudgery.

52 The Tricky Business of Giving Rewards Psychologists, employers and teachers are finding that rewards can backfire.

David Mark Mantell

56 Doves Vs. Hawks: Guess Who Had the Authoritarian Parents? A study of 25 war resisters and 25 Green Berets compares the childhood and adolescence of young men who loathe the military with those who love it. The two groups don't always differ; on a test of dogmatism, they score much alike.

Robert Rosenthal,
Dane Archer, M. Robin
DiMatteo, Judith Hall
Koivumaki, and Peter L. Rogers

64 Body Talk and Tone of Voice: The Language Without Words A visual test measures sensitivity to nonverbal messages: in that fast shot of a distressed woman, was she expressing anger or talking about her divorce? Women are better at this business than men, but men in mental health and the arts score more like women.

Carol Tavis

72 "What Does College Do for a Person?" "Frankly, Very Little," a conversation with Theodore Newcomb. A psychologist who has studied students and colleges for almost half a century talks about teaching, the antiscientific mood on campus, and whether higher education is worth it.

Carol Tavis

76 The Art of Staying Optimistic, a sketch of Theodore Newcomb

Howard Schuman

82 Racial Attitude Change: Are Whites Really More Liberal? Blacks Aren't Impressed Whites have steadily become more liberal about integration and intermarriage; but black mistrust of white intentions is on the rise.

Carol Tavis

86 The Bogus Pipeline A new way to find out what people "really" think walks in where surveys fear to tread.

Salvatore R. Maddi

90 Freud's Most Famous Patient: The Victimization of Dora A bold reinterpretation of Freud's classic case of hysteria finds that the patient, not Freud, was thinking realistically.

Herbert H. Clark

102 The Power of Positive Speaking: It Takes Longer to Understand No Negatives are not unnecessary, but they take longer to understand. There is a reason we have so much trouble with bureaucratese, which ties us up in nots, don'ts, nevers, and excepts.

Patrice French

112 A Report From Readers: Is Psychology Today Sweet or Sour? Eight thousand readers filled out a semantic differential scale to tell us what they think of PT. They told us, all right.

Clay Carson
Winthrop D. Jordan

118 The White Profits of Slavery: Time on the Cross: Two Views of a Controversial Book Authors Robert William Fogel and Stanley L. Engerman use a computer science called cliometrics to analyze slavery, concluding that blacks did not suffer as much as we assume. Two historians take up arms against the book and its conclusions.

T George Harris

4 Personal: Creative Mules

Joyce Carol Oates

10 Don Juan's Last Laugh Is Carlos Castaneda artist or anthropologist? A novelist explores the fourth book of the don Juan series, Tales of Power, and finds a fellow artist.

Robert E. Ornstein

14 Aging With Dignity: A Quiet Wisdom That Shows How Much We Have Lost Robert Coles and photographer Alex Harris introduce us to The Old Ones of New Mexico, where age is honored.

Patrice Horn

18 News Line How chivalrous men react to aggressive women; how liberated women react to aggressive stories; why babies take so long to launch a smile; and other items.

Garrett Hardin

38 Stimulus/Response: Lifeboat Ethics: The Case Against Helping the Poor Using the metaphor of the lifeboat, which has limited space and resources, a biologist argues that the humanitarian impulse to save the starving poor will eventually doom us all.
