SPORTS AFIELD—April 1964

THE NEW WEATHERBY MARK XXII .22 caliber rimfire

Other .22's compare with it only in caliber!

This is the long-awaited Weatherby Mark XXII, a semi-automatic .22 caliber rimfire sporting rifle. Read that again. You'll want to remember exactly how it was that you discovered there are now only two basic kinds of .22's to choose from. There is this one. And then there are all the others.

Your sense of touch will tell you this the minute you shoulder the new Weatherby. It's a remarkable feeling. As soon as your hands wrap around the walnut, you know you're holding a real rifle, the likes of which has never before chambered a .22 long rifle cartridge.

You're right. This, after all, is a Weatherby. And it was designed to be racked up alongside a Weatherby Mark V Magnum without looking lost or one bit bashful. Ever seen a .22 that could stand out in that company?

Now fasten your eyes on the features that set this .22 apart from all others. There's the convenient Single Shot Selector, a Weatherby first, that lets you choose semi-automatic or single shot with a flick of the thumb. The bolt is designed to stay open after each round when used as a single shot. As a semi-automatic, the bolt remains open when the last shot is fired. Outstanding safety features for range or field!

The highly polished classic Weatherby checkered stock has Monte Carlo comb, cheek rest, pistol grip and a checkered buttplate that begs to be shouldered. The receiver is grooved for scope mount. The 3-leaf rear sight has 50, 75, and 100-yard flip-up settings. The exclusive contoured barrel has a highly polished blued finish you'd expect to find on any Weatherby. Five- and 10-shot magazines are provided. Weight, approximately 6 lbs., length, 42 3/4 in.

Put yourself to the test. See if you can talk to your Weatherby dealer for more than three minutes without asking to handle a new Mark XXII. But beware! The modest price tag is designed to weaken you even more. If you already own a Weatherby Mark V, don't let it mingle with any .22 but this. If you don't yet own a Weatherby, there's no easier way to start. For a free Mark XXII brochure, write to: Weatherby, Inc., 2781 E. Firestone Blvd., South Gate, California. In Canada, Canadian Sauer, Ltd., 103 Church St., Toronto, Ontario.
