One of a continuing series. Remington Reports

Introducing the brand-new Remington Model 870 "Wingmaster" Left-Hand Pump Shotgun ... the only pump shotgun made with the ejection port located on the left side of the receiver.

The advantage this offers left-handed shooters is important: no more ejected shell hulls flying past his face. And this could be very important for some right-handed shooters as well!

How come? Because scientists have found that people tend to have a dominant or master eye. Just because you're right-handed, it does not automatically follow that your right eye is your master eye. It could be your left one.

Here's how to tell which is your master eye. If you're right-handed, hold out your right arm to its full length and sight with your thumb on some distant object, keeping both eyes open (see photo A). Now, close your left eye. If your thumb seems to move off target, (see photo B) then your left eye is your master eye. To check on it, close your right eye and open your left—without moving your hand. If your thumb is now back on target, it proves you used your left eye to sight with—even when both eyes were open.

Naturally, if your left eye is your master eye, you're better off using that one to shoot with even though you may be right-handed. If you're an experienced shooter, you may not want to learn new habits, but it's wise for beginners to learn to use their master eye. And the left-hand 870 is an easy gun to start with since the pump action can be operated with either hand. Incidentally, it's a good idea for parents to learn the correct master eye of their children before buying them their first gun. If they are left-eyed, this "Wingmaster" is the gun for them.

The new 870 is a good bet, because it meets the high standards of dependability set by the right-hand Model 870's. It has a receiver machined from a solid piece of steel. Double action bars permit you to pump the gun twice as smoothly—without twisting or binding. Exclusive "vibra-honing" finish makes the action easier to work and permits a deeper, richer blueing. The stock and fore-end have an exclusive Remington RK-W finish that will protect them against the rigors of the weather and the field for years.

The Model 870 Left-Hand Pump Action comes in both 12 and 20 gauge with optional barrel lengths of 26" improved cylinder, 28" full or modified, and 30" full chokes, plain or with ventilated ribs. There is also a 12 gauge magnum model with a 30" full choke with either a plain or ventilated-rib barrel. Both trap models are 12 gauge with a 30" full-choke ventilated-rib barrel, and one has a Monte Carlo stock.

Whichever model you select, we suggest that for best results you always use either "Remington" or "Peters" shotgun shells. Our testing procedure matches the guns and ammo to each other. In addition, you get the benefits of our famous "Kleanbore" non-corrosive priming for faster, surer ignition along with a clean, bright barrel. Our patented "Power Piston" one-piece wads deliver 10% more shot in the pattern area.

Remington Reports is a series based on information straight from the "Remington-Peters" experts who design and engineer all Remington products. If you'd like to build your own hunting and shooting manual, we'll send you a free binder to keep them in. You'll also get a free copy of our new, 48-page color catalog by writing to: Remington Arms Company, Inc., Department 112, Bridgeport, Connecticut 06602
