CONNING TOWER COMPUTER

for the design, development, and systems and components Today, Librascope designed and manufactured electronic equipment for the MK 113, MK 111, MK 110, MK 107, and MK 105 water fire control systems include computers, attack directors, torpedo navigation angle solvers, attack plotters, depth plotters, position keepers, target motion analyzers, stabilization computers, roll and pitch computers, and various indicators and control instruments. ■ Librascope's simulation laboratories provide the Navy with a means for testing and analyzing the performance of equipment under "real attack" conditions. In the field, our engineers assist in the maintenance and improvement of Librascope systems.
