NATURE AND THE CITY

August Heckscher

6

An article adapted from a speech by New York City's Parks Commissioner points out that our survival may depend on listening to what nature has to tell us. For many, city parks are the only place to "hear."

THE UNNATURAL HISTORY OF THE ANT LION

Joseph Wood Krutch

14

A long-time student of the natural world traces the ant lion in fact and fancy, from Old Testament times to the present.

AN IMPROBABLE SOLID

David Webster—Photographs by Charles Pratt

26

The formation of ice on a pond is one of winter's charms and one of chemistry's out-of-the-ordinary happenings.

ACROSS EARTH'S CRUCIAL BOUNDARY

Thomas M. Griffiths

32

A narrow layer of our environment from several feet below ground to about six feet above is the province of microclimatologists. Their studies affect orange groves as well as glaciers.

ILL SHAPEN BEAST

Fred Bruemmer

40

Once the prey only of wolves and Eskimos, the ungainly Arctic muskox was nearly decimated by the white man's gun. Fifty years of protection have stayed its extinction.

ETHIOPIA: Part II

Alan Ternes

46

A geographer concludes his two-part article on this East African country and its groping toward modernization.

ENIGMA ON THE SEA FLOOR

O. C. Farquhar

54

Newly discovered trails on the ocean floor at a depth of some 10,000 feet closely resemble those of extinct trilobites that lived a half billion years ago.

THE SLASH-AND-BURN TECHNIQUE

W. M. S. Russell

58

An ancient method of farming is producing fewer crops and causing an agricultural crisis for growing populations in the equatorial tropics.
